HIGH STANDARDS TO BE REQUIRED

Indiana Educational Department Preparing for New Vocational Subjects in Schools.

NEW LAW IN FORCE THIS FALL

Department Started in Seymour High School This Year and is Popular With Students.

State financial aid for vocational education and the complete new Indiana vocational education laws become operative this fall. Prevocational work, provided for in the 1913 laws, which lay the foundation for a radical overhauling of the educational system, has been introduced during this school year. Beginning, however, with the 1914-1915 school year, those communities that desire to do so, and that meet certain qualifications, may open the new schools which shall educate children of fourteen years or more, in and for definite profitable employment, and the state can be called upon to pay two-thirds of the bill for instruction. The state, however, has rights of general dictation and specifies strict requirements. The vocational department was inaugurated in the local schools by Superintendent Mott last fall and has been popular with the high school students. The domestic science classes are crowded and many boys are enrolled in the agricultural classes. The department here is conducted on a very economical basis and the local plan has been investigated by a number of superintendents in this part of the state.

Charles A. Greathouse, state superintendent of public instruction, and William F. Book, the deputy state superintendent in charge of vocational education, are putting to press, with the approval of the state board of education, a bulletin which states the requirements that will be exacted by the state. If they, and the state board of education behind them, stand firm to the standards set in the bulletin, communities that avail themselves of the new state vocational educational fund will have to meet high and just requirements.

The bulletin makes it clear, also, that the old line school teacher has no place in vocational education. Men and women, highly trained in industry—that is, factory, home and farm work—and who also possess the art of pedagogy, must teach the new education. Mr. Greathouse and Mr. Book also make it plain that vocational education is not a new phase of manual training, which seems to be the general idea of the old line pedagogical army. Those who teach the new education must have vocational education license. The examination will be outlined soon in a bulletin. The ordinary teaching license will not be sufficient in the new system.

The bulletin about to be issued outlines the new education. It is shown that "it is not a mere fad or radical departure from past educational ideals and practices in this state, but marks the culmination of an educational policy a hundred years old." The Indiana Constitution of 1816 and the present one, adopted in 1851, declared for an educational policy for the promotion of all arts, sciences, commerce, manufacturing and natural history. It is pointed out that a half century ago the state began to make provision for special training for technical and professional work. Later schools were opened to train teachers, lawyers, doctors, and also to teach agriculture, but not farmers. "Our present vocational education law," says the bulletin, "merely contemplates the extension of this principle so as to provide the same definite vocational training for those who must work in the shop, in the home, or on the farm." The bulletin further says: "It is an attempt to make our present system of free education more truly democratic."

The next proposition outlined is an effective vocational system. In teaching boys to become machinists, for example, it is quite as impossible to do it with the old line teacher as it is to try to teach medicine by the same corps of teachers.

The institute went on record as favoring the national constitutional prohibition amendment and mention of the proposed change was made by several of the speakers.

The following resolutions were adopted:

We, the members of the Jackson County Women's Christian Temperance Union in county institute convened, do hereby Guy Dixon Dead.

Deputy Prosecutor F. W. Wesner received a message this morning that his nephew, Guy Dixon, died Tuesday at Las Animas, Colo. He was twenty-three years of age and served four years in the U. S. Navy. While in the service on the Battleship Maryland he contracted pneumonia fever which affected his lungs. He went to Colorado in hopes of recovering his health and until a few days ago was apparently improving. The remains will be shipped to Sparksville for burial. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Dixon and is survived by his father, one sister, Mrs. Eva Ward, of Chicago, and his grandparents. His mother died when he was a small child and he was reared by his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Wesner, of Louisville.

CITY EXECUTIVES HOLD CONFERENCE

Mayor Ross Attends Meeting Called by Mayor Joseph E. Bell at Indianapolis.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION

"Clean up and Paint up" Week is Endorsed as a Sanitary Measure—Other Subjects Discussed.

Mayor John A. Ross, of this city, is attending the conference of the executives of the principal cities of Indiana in session at Indianapolis. The meeting was called by Mayor Joseph E. Bell, of Indianapolis, for the purpose of discussing important questions relative to the government and welfare of municipalities. This is the first time that such a meeting has been held and it is thought that the executive heads of the various cities may gain much valuable information by such a conference.

The mayors of thirty-six Indiana cities are present and this morning it was decided to form a permanent organization. A committee was appointed to draft the by-laws and constitution for the government of the organization.

At the session Tuesday afternoon the executives discussed the welfare of city government without reference to politics. Although all parties are represented at the conference, politics have been eliminated and all the representatives are working with the one view of securing information that will assist them in their work.

Several of the mayors stated that they were in favor of "clean-up and paint-up week" and had set aside one week in May when the citizens would be urged to remove all rubbish and trash that had collected during the winter months. It was believed that such a campaign would improve the sanitary conditions of the city and at the same time better the appearance of the streets and alleys.

Various questions, including law enforcement, local option, Sunday baseball, and others were discussed at the conference. It is expected that similar meetings will be held annually.

Governor Ralston spoke to the mayors Tuesday at the first session.

REDDING TOWNSHIP FARMER KICKED IN HEAD BY HORSE

Charles Foist Suffered Severe Injuries and is Brought to the Seymour Hospital.

Charles Foist, a farmer living in Redding township, was kicked in the head by a horse this afternoon and is in a serious condition. Husted's ambulance was ordered to the Foist home and he will be brought to the hospital.

Mr. Foist was making arrangements for a public sale at his farm Thursday. While walking around one of the horses the animal kicked him in the head and it is feared that his skull is fractured. The shoe cut a gash through his lip and his face was bruised. Although an examination showed that he was in a serious condition the extent of the injuries will not be known until he arrives at the hospital.

STANDISH FAMILY WILL RECOVER FROM INJURIES

Bedford People, Known in Seymour, Have Narrow Escape From Death in Auto Accident.

Information has been received here from Bedford that the injuries received by Miles Standish and the members of his family in an automobile accident Sunday, are not serious and that all will recover. Mr. Standish, who is a prominent resident of Bedford, is well known in this city where he has a number of relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Standish, their two sons, Miles, Jr., and Herald, and daughter, Miss Ruth, were in the machine and the car was struck by a freight train. The automobile was pushed down the track for a considerable distance but the spectators could not signal the engineer to stop the train. Mr. Standish received severe injuries of the head and two fingers were broken. One shoulder and his right knee were also badly injured. Mrs. Standish received injuries on the left shoulder and the daughter suffered a sprained ankle and a bruised shoulder. Miles, Jr., received a severe gash on the head. Herald and Miss Mitchell, guests, were not injured.

Eye witnesses of the accident believed that all the occupants would be killed. Mr. Standish was driving the car and failed to notice the approaching train until he heard a shout of warning. He applied the brakes and the car stopped on the track. The engineer was unable to see the perilous position of the machine and did not stop the train until the machine had been pushed along the track for about a block. It was completely wrecked. Mr. Standish was the last to be taken from the machine.

SAYS CRAWFORD FAIRBANKS WAS TO HAVE BEEN INDICTED

Special Prosecutor Declared That Judge Fortune Knew of the Plan Before Consultation.

By United Press.
Terre Haute, Ind., April 29.—Special Prosecutor Hamill, who was dismissed by Judge Fortune while directing the special grand jury in the election fraud investigation, declared today that he intended to subpoena Crawford Fairbanks, one of the leading Democratic politicians in Vigo county, within thirty minutes after Fairbanks reached Terre Haute. He declared further that Judge Fortune was aware of his plan before the consultation of Taggart, Fairbanks, Roberts and Judge Fortune at Indianapolis.

Hamill asserted that Tom Baggs, a partner of Crawford Fairbanks, was to have been indicted this week and that Judge Fortune was aware of this indictment.

FIFTY-SEVEN MEXICANS ESCAPE FROM U. S. POST

Federal Prisoners Elude Guards During Blinding Rain Storm—Eleven Recaptured.

By United Press.
San Diego, Cal., April 29.—During a blinding rain storm early today, fifty-seven Mexican federal prisoners escaped from Fort Rosecrans. They were sent to the Fort about a week ago.

As soon as it became known that the prisoners had escaped U. S. troops were sent after them and eleven were recaptured. It is expected that several others, at least, will be in the custody of the troops before many hours.

ARBITRATORS PROPOSE THIRTY-DAY ARMISTICE

THE NEWEST NEWS.

The Republican was the only newspaper circulated in Seymour Tuesday that published an account of the mine disaster at Eccles, West Virginia. The account was furnished by the United Press Association of which this paper is a client. The explosion occurred at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon and a bulletin was sent to the Republican within an hour. It is another illustration of the excellent service provided for the readers of the Republican who are kept informed of the important news events throughout the country "hot" from the wire.

During the present trouble between the United States and Mexico this paper has been enabled to publish the latest developments and in many instances "scooped" all other afternoon papers circulated in the city and county. The United Press has a large force of trained correspondents on the field and is in a position to give its clients the true, uncolored facts without delay.

Besides the wire dispatches the Republican gives particular attention to the local field.

One Hundred Ninety-six Men Entombed and There is Little Hope of Saving Them.

By United Press.
Charlestown, W. Va., April 29.—Because of fire which is still raging in the shaft at the mine owned by the New River Colliery Company, at Eccles, rescuing parties have been unable to enter the mine. One hundred and ninety-six men are entombed in the mine.

Many of the miners who were entrapped were rescued but were seriously injured. The depth of the two shafts is 600 feet and the mines are connected underground. Little hope is held out for the rescue of the entombed men.

FEDERAL TROOPS ON WAY TO STRIKE ZONE IN COLORADO

War Department is Advised U. S. Soldiers From Ft. Leavenworth and Ft. Russell Have Departed.

By United Press.
Washington, April 29.—The war department was advised today that four companies of federal troops, second regiment, left Fort Leavenworth early today for Trinidad, Colo., to quell the trouble in the strike zone. The President ordered the troops to go to Trinidad yesterday. Troops from Ft. Russell are also leaving for Colorado. The state militia has been temporarily withdrawn from the field until the state can again reassert its authority.

MEDIATORS MAKE FIRST SUGGESTION

According to Terms Hostilities of Rebel Forces in Mexico Must Cease During That Time.

UNITED STATES FAVORABLE

Assurance Must be Given, However, That There Will be no Uprising Against American Citizens.

By United Press.
Washington, April 29.—The first step towards bringing about an amicable adjustment of the trouble between the United States and General Huerta was taken this afternoon by the mediation board when it was requested that the two countries agree to a thirty day armistice. According to the terms of the request neither country will engage in hostilities and the activities of the rebels will also cease.

It is understood that the United States looks with favor upon the proposition provided assurance is given that there will be no uprisings in Mexico against the American citizens.

The mediation board, consisting of the ambassadors of Brazil, Chili and Argentina, have held long conferences since the plan was proposed and none of the proceedings has been made public.

Huerta will be informed of the action of the mediators and it is expected he will comply with the request or reject it without delay. The administration in this country will likely accept the terms if an assurance is given by both the federal and rebel leaders in Mexico that the Americans will be protected.

As soon as the replies from Huerta and the United States are received the mediators will begin immediately upon a plan to bring about a final adjustment of the trouble. It is believed this can be accomplished without difficulty if Huerta will resign his place but in the Washington diplomatic circles there is a doubt if he will agree to any compromise that contains this provision.

CARRANZA AND VILLA AGREE TO TAKE NO PART IN TROUBLE

Constitutionalist Leaders Will Remain Neutral if There is no "Invasion of their Territory."

A report today that Carranza and Villa, the Constitutionalist leaders, had agreed to remain neutral in dealings between Huerta and the American government "so long as there was no invasion of their territory" was an encouraging development.

PRISONERS RELEASED BY HUERTA

Bars Let Down for All Americans.

TAKEN TO VERA CRUZ

They Report That No Americans Have Been Injured.

HEAVY RANSOM IS DEMANDED

In Some Instances, Jailers Enriched Themselves.

Vera Cruz, April 29.—The United States transport Hancock left here at daylight for Puerto Mexico to take on board the 600 refugees reported to be on their way to that place from Mexico City.

Vera Cruz, April 29.—Practically all of the American prisoners held at Cordoba are safe at Vera Cruz. A special train bearing about 110 very happy men, women and children arrived at 5 o'clock last evening. Sixty-three of them came from Lomo Benito, eleven from the Hacienda Protero, and the remainder from Cordoba, Tierra Blanca and other districts of the state of Vera Cruz.

The prisoners, some of whom show the effect of imprisonment, were released in accordance with orders, they were told, from President Huerta, who did not wish to hold them longer. They were placed on trains and sent down to the Mexican outposts, where they were escorted on foot across a break in the railroad to a point where they espied a special train awaiting the 250 Americans who had left Mexico City the day before. The train brought them at once to Vera Cruz.

So far as refugees knew there are some Americans still at Cordoba, who hope to be released very soon, but with that exception the country is clear of them between El Burro, Tierra Blanca and Vera Cruz.

No Americans Injured.

The refugees report that no Americans have been injured so far as they have heard and little property damage inflicted. There were mobs in all the towns, but they confined themselves to vocal demonstrations. The releases were effected by Consul General Canada, who got into communication with Mexico City and used his persuasive powers with the result mentioned.

The consul general is making more representations to Mexico City. A report has been received by him that A. B. Emery of Aguas Calientes, manager of the La Fe Mining company, Gualterio Ejkel and C. A. Smith, British subjects, have been imprisoned at Aguas Calientes and held for a heavy ransom. Emery is an American.

The report came that thirty Americans who had been employed at a mine in Aguas Calientes had been released from arrest by the payment of 250,000 pesos in bullion as a ransom. They were said to be on a train bound for Mexico City. In the party were Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Culver, Mr. and Mrs. H. Reelman and their four children, and Gaston Smooth, American consul at Aguas Calientes.

Normal Conditions Resumed.

Admiral Fletcher has the city now running almost at its normal pace. The signs of military occupancy are disappearing from the principal streets and the guarding is all in the environs and in the outlying districts. There always is a bustle about the headquarters of Admiral Fletcher, but no patrols have been put on the houseposts in suspected districts except the provost guards, which make rounds regularly. Because of the general relaxation in severity owing to the respect with which the Mexicans have come to regard the invaders, there are very few restrictions anywhere. General Frederick Funston and the fighting Fifth brigade remain aboard the transports. They may land today and they may not land until tomorrow. The question seems undecided.

Officially it is stated that the army requires three days in which to relieve the navy of occupation, although the sailors went ashore in an hour. An official statement said that the desire of Washington not to do anything which might add to the feeling in Mexico City may be responsible for the delay.

THE MEDIATION PROGRAM

Proposition Seeks Peace Among All Factions in Mexico.

Washington, April 29.—The next move in the mediation proceeding probably will be a suggestion by the governments of Chili, Argentina and Brazil, designed to end internal strife in Mexico.

The representatives of the three South American republics already have formulated a tentative draft of a

GOVERNOR AMMONS

Colorado Executive Declares Entire State in Insurrection

proposal of this character to be sent to all factions in Mexico.

As understood here the plan contemplates an invitation to Huerta, Carranza and possibly Zapata to designate representatives who may confer in regard to ways and means of bringing an end to the strife and dissension among Mexicans which have torn the republic from one end to the other and which have now threatened to plunge the country into a war with the United States. As a necessary corollary to such conferences a temporary suspension of all hostilities between the Mexican factions will be suggested.

To Restore Peace and Order.

In formulating such a plan the South American diplomats show clearly that their intention in opening the present negotiations goes beyond the mere settlement of the acute situation between Huerta and the United States; that they are in fact hopeful of being able to bring out of the present negotiations results which will remove the fundamental cause of irritation between this government and Mexico and which will restore peace and order in the southern republic. A move of this character by the representatives of Chili, Brazil and Argentina is regarded here as more likely of success than any plan that has been suggested thus far. By taking the initiative themselves the mediators will avoid the irritation which would certainly be caused by the participation of the United States government itself in any such suggestion. It was only six months or so ago when President Wilson himself made such a proposal to Huerta. When he sent John Lind to Mexico one of the suggestions or demands was that Huerta should enter into an agreement with all other factions in Mexico for a suspension of hostilities pending a general constitutional election. The Wilson proposals, however, were tied to others which were particularly offensive to Huerta and the dictator rejected all of them with a considerable show of resentment.

With the United States entirely eliminated and with the proposals emanating from peoples of a kindred blood and having many common interests, Huerta may be disposed to give these suggestions consideration.

Carranza an Obstacle.

The plan of the mediators would seem to indicate that they hoped to get some scheme for the settlement of Mexico's internal difficulties under way before they undertake any definite move in regard to the adjustment of the acute situation between the United States and Huerta. This course is regarded here as the logical one. If the mediators are able to effect an understanding among the factions in Mexico and restore peace to that country they will have gone a long way toward solving the troubles between Huerta and this government.

Carranza is likely to prove a greater obstacle to the carrying out of this plan than Huerta himself. The leader of the Constitutionalists has been making rapid inroads recently upon the territory of the Mexican dictator, and, flushed with victory, probably will balk at entering into any conference with representatives of Huerta and other factions in Mexico.

All that Carranza and Villa have asked from this government is a free inflow of arms and ammunition across the border, and they have boasted that within a few months they will have swept on victoriously to Mexico City. Under these circumstances Carranza is likely to resist stubbornly any suggestions which might involve a sacrifice of the fruits of his labors. Should Villa stand formally behind him the situation might be hopeless, but the military leader of the Constitutionalists has given evidence recently of a very liberal spirit toward the United States, and there are strong hopes that he may prevail over the nominal head of the Constitutional party.

Rumors of Murder.

Vera Cruz, April 29.—A rumor that five Americans have been killed at Panuco is not confirmed here.

REGULARS SENT INTO COLORADO

President Takes Hand In Industrial War.

THE LAST RESORT IS ADOPTED

Upon the State's Final Admission That It Is Powerless to Suppress the Civil War That Has Been in Progress in Strike District, President Wilson Orders Federal Troops to Take Charge of the Situation.

Denver, Col., April 29.—Every coal camp in the state of Colorado is in rebellion as federal troops, ordered out by the president to take charge of the situation are on their way to the disaffected districts. News of the ordering of federal soldiers into the field apparently has had little effect on the strikers and the mine guards who have been engaged in a battle to the death for a week. Governor Ammons has issued a proclamation declaring the entire state in insurrection.

Washington, April 29.—President Wilson has ordered a squadron and two troops of federal cavalry to the Colorado strike districts.

He did this after issuing a proclamation which sets forth that a condition of violence exists in Colorado which Governor Ammons says the state authorities are unable to suppress and which is of such character as not to permit of the delay necessary to summon the legislature in extraordinary session for emergency measures. The proclamation serves notice upon the persons responsible for the disturbance that unless order immediately is restored the troops will be used to compel it.

Emphatic announcement was made at the White House that the employment of the troops should not be regarded as interference in the mining community, but merely a measure to restore order. The troops have been ordered to the strike districts at the urgent request of the senators and representatives from Colorado and all parties to the controversy. The troops ordered out are the Second Squadron of the Fifth cavalry from Fort Leavenworth, ordered to Trinidad; Troops E and H, Twelfth cavalry, from Fort D. A. Russell, Wyoming, ordered to Canon City.

At both of the points toward which the troops are moving the Colorado state militia have made ineffectual attempts to restore order, using machine guns and rifles freely. The result has been a heavy toll of deaths, not only of the striking miners themselves, but of women and children. The situation has been freely characterized as atrocious. The president in a long telegram to Governor Ammons suggests the immediate withdrawal of the state militia in order that there may be no division of authority.

A ROCKEFELLER STATEMENT

Head of Colorado Fuel and Iron Company Goes Into Print.

New York, April 29.—The only point at issue between the Colorado Fuel and Iron company and the miners so far as the company is concerned, is unionizing the miners at the demand of an outside body, said John D. Rockefeller, jr., in the first statement he has made concerning the Colorado situation.

Mr. Rockefeller said the company had voluntarily granted all the demands of the men long before the strike was thought of. The eight-hour day, semi-monthly pay, check weights employed by the miners, and increases of wages, were all established by the company before the strike began. The storekeepers are under strict instructions to tell all employees of the company that they can purchase where they please and that their standing with the company will not be affected by it, and as a matter of fact, Mr. Rockefeller said, only 22 per cent of the men's wages are spent in the company stores.

When Congressman Foster, chairman of the committee on mines and mining, came to New York at the behest of the president to interview Mr. Rockefeller in the hope of a solution of the present situation he was unable to make any suggestion which did not involve the unionizing of the mines, or the submission of that question to arbitration. Mr. Rockefeller will not arbitrate this matter; he states that only 10 per cent of the company's employees are union men, and it is the constitutional right of these men to work without making a distasteful alliance.

Dr. Meredith Convicted.

Pittsburg, April 29.—Dr. C. C. Meredith, who was arrested some weeks ago in a sensational raid on his private maternity hospital, known as "the house of mystery," pleaded guilty to malpractice here and was fined 6 1/2 cents and sentenced to not less than five nor more than six years in the western penitentiary. The fine was imposed so that the costs would fall on the accused man.

The Mexican federals retreating from Monterey to Saltillo suffered a severe defeat at the hands of a strong pursuing rebel column, leaving on the field many dead and wounded.

NATIONAL GUARD WAITING ORDERS

Ready to Go to the Front at a Moment's Notice.

PLANS PRACTICALLY COMPLETE

With the Expectation That Mobilization Orders May Be Issued Any Moment, the Indiana Militia Is Being Recruited to Its Full War Strength and the Officers of the Guard Are "Sleeping on Their Arms."

Indianapolis, April 29.—Belief that final orders calling the Indiana national guard into a central mobilization camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison may reach the headquarters of the guard here at any moment has kept the force in the headquarters offices keyed up to the highest pitch. It is understood that in event the guards are called into service Fort Benjamin Harrison will be a mobilization point of importance, not only for Indiana troops, but for regulars, and possibly troops from surrounding states.

The bulletins, which are being sent out practically each day to guardsmen from the state headquarters, all make direct reference to active service, and officers of the guard at the headquarters in the statehouse confidently expected mobilization orders within a day or two.

Two words—"mobilization orders"—flashed across hundreds of wires in the state of Indiana, possibly within the next few hours, can bring to a central mobilization camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison within the next forty-eight hours probably 1,500 or more soldiers to act under direction of the president. Many officers of the guard, during the last few days, have figuratively "slept on their arms" in preparation for orders from Washington.

The Indiana guard is practically ready for the field, with the exception of recruiting some companies to the full war strength. Some of the companies have been filling up rapidly.

Schmutz and 110 other Americans who had been detained at Aguas Calientes by Federal soldiers had been released and were safe in Mexico City on their way to Vera Cruz, was a relieving feature of a tense situation created by previous reports that citizens of the United States had been subjected to persecution. Refugees continued to arrive at Vera Cruz from the Huerta capital and special trains were expected to pick up additional foreigners between Mexico City and the coast. The transport Hancock was sent from Vera Cruz to Puerto to take away refugees arriving from the interior by the Tehuantepec railroad. Supplemental reports from Rear-Admiral Badger today said that wounded Americans marines and bluejackets on the hospital ship Solace continued to gain, and that critical cases appeared hopeful. "Each day," the report stated, "it begins to look as if we would not lose a case." Admiral Badger added that the wounded on the New Hampshire, Florida, South Carolina and Chester were all doing well. The only patient on the New Hampshire returned to duty today, leaving a total of fifty-nine wounded under treatment.

ANXIETY RELIEVED BY PROMISE OF GEN. HUERTA
Dictator Tells Commander of British Ship That Americans Will be Permitted to Go to Coast.
Vera Cruz, April 29.—Anxiety in Vera Cruz as to friends and relatives in the interior has been relieved by the information that the Mexican authorities were permitting Americans to come down to the coast. Today the American colony here, which is

GETTING THE SUMMER HOME READY
Perhaps you have not made your plans yet—the advertising in The Republican will help you. Want some suggestions as to how to furnish it attractively and at the least expense? growing steadily, settled down to await news from Puerto Mexico of the arrival of three trainloads of refugees from Mexico City which the Huerta officials promised Commander Tweedie, of the British cruiser Essex would be dispatched from the capital last night. The route from the capital to Puerto, Mexico, is long and roundabout, and it was expected that the trains would not reach the coast before next Friday. Rear-Admiral Badger will have a vessel at Puerto, Mexico to meet the refugees. He probably will not send a warship, as this might arouse anti-American feeling in a town, which, up to the present time, has been entirely quiet. The passenger boats available here for the trip to Puerto, Mexico, have limited wireless equipment, consequently the arrival of the refugee trains, together with the names of those on board, may not be learned until the steamer returns to Vera Cruz. If the refugee trains were filled to capacity, as it was believed they would be, it was estimated that eight hundred people would be conveyed to Puerto, Mexico. It is impossible in Vera Cruz to determine how many Americans this would leave in the capital. William W. Canada, the American consul here, was endeavoring to obtain information along this line from the Brazilian minister at Mexico City, to whom the affairs of the United States were intrusted when Charge O'Shaughnessy left. Mr. O'Shaughnessy and Arnold Shanklin, the American consul-general at Mexico City, who came out with him, are still here awaiting orders. So far as is known they have given no intimation as to their probable instructions from Washington. This is construed here to mean that the state department retains hope of a satisfactory adjustment of the present difficulty, which would make it possible for these officials to return to Mexico City. Consequently their return to the United States now might be inexpedient.

Still on Transports.
By United Press.
Vera Cruz, April 29.—The Fifth brigade of United States soldiers sent here are still aboard the transports but the landing may be made today.

NEWSY PARAGRAPHS.

E. church has arranged for a reception at the church Thursday night for the new members. An excellent musical program has been prepared and all the members of the congregation are expected to attend. CARRANZA ADMITS HE WAS MISTAKEN
Villa Brought His Chief to Revise Policy.

El Paso, April 29.—As the strongest man in the Mexican rebel ranks, Pancho Villa has sustained his title. He is for peace with the United States so forcibly that Venustiano Carranza is going to modify his letter to President Wilson. The whole thing will be given to the world by Carranza declaring—and the way has already been paved by his diplomats—that what he said was misinterpreted by the American people and that while he had an objection, at first impulse, to the landing of American troops at Vera Cruz, he has thought the thing over since, has carefully weighed the matter in every respect, and is fully and completely satisfied that it is a mighty fine thing for the United States to hold Vera Cruz and let him and Villa have a chance to fight Huerta from the north. This was what Villa said from the first. Then Villa said that his chief was very unwise. Villa expressed his sentiments to George C. Carothers, who wired them to Bryan and Wilson. Then Villa stalked off from the border to Chihuahua to tell his chief not only that he was very unwise, but that he must admit it to the world. Carothers knew Villa and he knew that when Villa said Carranza must, that Carranza would, so he has already hinted to Washington what to expect. Things will continue to go on as they have been going in the past unless these diplomats make Villa really angry some of these days. Villa will continue to refer to "my jefe," and Carranza will continue to sign "chief of the Constitutionalists," but observant ones know where the orders are coming from. Villa is dictating. He is said to have only talked with Carranza a few short minutes until he had convinced "his chief" that the rebel attitude toward the United States must be pacified. The official version of the meeting is that "General Carranza and General Villa had a lengthy conversation and the two are in thorough accord. Both believe that trouble with the United States will not occur. Negotiations between General Carranza and the Washington government are under way." Set Fire to Cattle Sheds. Peoria, Ill., April 29.—W. H. Fogle, discharged member of the fire department, has confessed that he set fire to the cattle sheds of the Morris Cattle company last Monday afternoon, which caused a loss of $200,000 and resulted in 1,000 cattle being burned to death. A Nebraska law giving the wife and children of men who become habitual drunkards an action against saloon keepers who sell them liquor has been sustained by the United States supreme court.

An Interference
By JOHN Y. LARNED
"What's the matter, Billy?" My sister Beth asked me the question one morning when I was sitting on the porch looking dreamily on the buds that were opening on the trees. "Nothing," I replied. "Yes; there is." Beth and I were great chums. There was not much more than a year between us, and I was used to giving her my confidence about everything. I resolved to throw my burden upon her in this case. "You know Alice Woodson?" "Oh, a case of lovesickness." I made no reply to this. I was sorry I had begun a confession. "Go on, Billy," Beth added. "I won't. You'll only poke fun at me." "Not a bit of it. I'll help you. Don't you know that I, being a girl, know just how a girl should be treated to be won?" "You can't tell me how to win Alice. In the first place, she's in love with Fred Perkins; in the second, she seems to have some sort of grudge against me, and in the third—" "That's enough. You needn't tell me any more. Now, listen to me. I knew all about this before I asked what was the matter with you. I've been watching you and watching Alice, and I'm convinced she's playing you." "What?" "Playing you—a sort of cat and mouse business." "Oh, bosh! For a week past she has treated me abominably and all the while has been looking up with her eyes at Fred like a—" "Like a chick in a thunderstorm. Will you do what I tell you to do?" "That depends upon what you tell me." "The next time you meet Alice pretend to be thinking about something else and don't see her." "That will make matters worse." "Very well; if you won't take the medicine I prescribe, go your own road." I concluded to try Beth's prescription. The next time I saw Alice coming I pretended to be absorbed in something else, and just before we were to come together I turned off in another direction. That was in the morning. In the afternoon of the same day we met again. I couldn't play the same game twice in the same day, so I looked at her. She looked at me, too, or, rather, she stared at me with a cold, blank, withering stare that froze the marrow in my bones. I went to Beth and abused her for getting me into such a pickle. "You're as weak as watered milk. I'm sorry I tried to do anything for you. I couldn't love a man I could bluff like that." "What would you want him to do?" "Crush me like a worm." "How crush you?" "Will you simply do nothing so far as Alice is concerned and leave the rest to me?" Since I felt entirely incapable of carrying on such a contest myself I agreed to this Fabian policy. During the next few days I kept out of Alice Woodson's way so far as I could. When I saw her coming toward me I changed my course. I tried not to look troubled or angry or anything in particular. I did my best to show no especial emotion while waiting for Beth to do something. One day I met Alice face to face. She bade me good morning in a rather buffy tone. I replied to her salutation. "I can understand now," she said, "your recent unfriendliness to me since I have learned the cause." "What cause?" "Oh, don't pretend ignorance! I used to think that you had a mind of your own." "And you don't think so now?" "You're the first man I ever knew who would permit his sister to run him." I began to catch on to what was at the bottom of this. Beth had evidently been at work. "What do you mean by my sister running me?" "I'm not supposed to tell, but I made no promise. Beth has told me all about it." "About what?" "About your new fancy. Mr. Ignorance, or, rather, her fancy. Any one can see that she is trying to bring it about herself, and with such a pliable brother I dare say she will." I plucked up a lot of courage at this. Beth had evidently produced a revolution. "Do you mean to say that my sister has been betraying my confidence?" "Your confidence! Why, she told me herself that she was bent on making a match for you. She said she wanted you to marry a girl that was her friend." I was pretty stupid, but not so stupid as not to see Beth's device and what it had accomplished. I cut the matter short by saying that when I married I would consult no one but the girl I wanted and began to talk of something else. It would have been better for me to have had the pluck to manage the affair myself, for my wife has never forgiven my sister for "trying to switch me off to one of her especial friends." I have told her the true story, but she won't believe it. Beth doesn't expect her to believe it. She says she wouldn't believe such a thin story herself.

A GAS EXPLOSION IN AN ECCLES COLLIERY

Hundreds of Miners Cut Off By Flames.

Charleston, W. Va., April 29.—Of the 196 men who went to work in the No. 5 mine of the New River company at Eccles yesterday, none have been rescued and it is believed all have perished. Of the 74 who entered the No. 6 mine, sixty have been taken out alive. Four are dead. Ten men remain unaccounted for in mine No. 6.

Eccles, W. Va., April 29.—Fears are entertained for the lives of 270 miners who are entombed in the Eccles mines of the New River Colliery company here. There was an explosion followed by fire in shaft No. 5, in which 185 men were at work, and the flames extended to shaft No. 6, where eighty-five miners were at work. Little hope is entertained of saving the miners. Rescuers trying to gain entrance to the miners have been driven back to the surface by the flames. Rescue crews from the nearby mining towns were rushed here, including the rescue car of the United States bureau of mines stationed at Bluefields, W. Va.

Volunteer crews penetrated No. 5 and No. 6 mines 200 feet when they were stopped by fire. All the entries in the mines are burning and little hope is entertained that the entombed miners will be taken out alive.

The rescue crews under the direction of Superintendent M. E. Kent took two foreigners from mine No. 5 and one from mine No. 6, all so severely burned that they are unrecognizable. They are expected to die. The fire in No. 5 has burned almost to the shaft and No. 6 mine is burning within 100 feet of the shaft.

Purifies Blood With Telling Effect

Gives Conscious Evidence of Its Direct Action.

S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, almost talks as it sweeps its way through the circulation. Its action is so direct that very often in some forms of skin affliction the appearance of the eruptions changes over night, the itch and redness are gone and recovery begins immediately.

As a matter of fact, there is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutrients. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples, and all skin affections.

And in regenerating the tissues S. S. S. has a rapid and positive antiseptic effect upon all those irritating influences that cause rheumatism, sore throat, weak eyes, loss of weight, thin, pale cheeks, and that weariness of muscle and nerve that is generally experienced as spring fever. Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and in a few days you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 534 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., who maintain a very efficient Medical Department, where all who have any blood disorder of a stubborn nature may write freely for advice and a special book of instruction. S. S. S. is sold everywhere by drug stores, department and general stores, but beware of all substitutes. Do not accept them.

Black Shoals Light

Cupid Got on the Job When
Pillar o' Fire Went Out

By CHARLES LEONARD

The United States government called it Black Shoals light, but the old fashioned name, Pillar o' Fire, still clung to it from the days when the tall, slender white column with its revolving red and white dashlight was first placed to mark the dangerous shoals off Graystone.

"We're in for a notheaster," predicted Simon Heatherby as he stamped into Liscum's store one November evening. "The sound's some riled up already."

Liscum whirled the handle of the coffee grinder, and the gritting buzz filled the room.

"I guess Pillar o' Fire's on duty. Ain't no cause to worry none about the boat," boomed Liscum above the roar of the coffee mill.

THE STURDY LITTLE CRAFT ROSE AND FELL ON THE WAVES.

"Who's worrying about the boat?" Jared Simon sharply.

"Looks like Cap'n Joe Heatherby's pa was some worried," cheeped Mrs. Liscum from behind the postoffice pigeons.

The half dozen customers looked apprehensively at old Simon Heatherby's weather beaten countenance, where a storm was gathering.

"What did you say, ma'am?" he asked smoothly.

"I said it looks like you was some worried over Cap'n Joe and the boat," repeated the postmistress crisply.

Simon laughed heartily.

"For twenty years I sailed that there boat across the sound, winter and summer, without ever missing a trip 'cept when the harbor froze up here," he said, addressing the loiterers in the store—"for twenty years, mind you—and you can all testify to the truth of what I say! And Joe—why, you, all know mighty well that Joe Heatherby's filled my place and outgrewed it," he went on with a father's unselfish pride in his only son. "There ain't a better navigator on the sound than my Joe!"

Just then the door opened quickly to admit an excited boy who appeared to have been blown in on the gale that followed him. The lumps flared blackly, and Liscum ran to close the door.

"What ails you, Tim?" he demanded angrily.

"Pillar o' Fire's out!" gasped Tim excitedly.

"Out!" they echoed in chorus, and Simon Heatherby added incredulously. "She was flarin' all right when I come in."

"She's out now."

They all trooped out to the porch, for the main street ran right down to the dock, and the dock edged out into the harbor. From Liscum's porch one could always see the Pillar o' Fire by day or night.

Tonight there was no friendly light down there.

"I been down to the dock, and there ain't a sight of the boat." Tim's voice carried here and there as the wind tore the words from his lips.

"What do you suppose has happened to the light?" asked Tim Liscum at last.

"Something's happened to Wallace," muttered Tim's father.

"The girl is there; she could tend the light."

"Why, Wallace's helper ought to be on hand; there's always supposed to be two of 'em on duty," piped Mrs. Liscum.

"I saw Mina Wallace over at the church. She was helping get the missionary barrel ready. She said she was going to stay all night with Cherry Blinn."

"Well, Rufus would be there, wouldn't he?" demanded Madison Peters impatiently.

Young Tim Liscum turned a pale face upon them. "I forgot to tell you all," he said in a scared voice. "Rufus Weed came ashore to bring Mina, and he's been down to the saloon, and—he can't walk a step."

"I want t' know!" breathed somebody excitedly.

Again the door opened, this time to admit a girl clad in a short gray skirt, a red wool sweater with a red knitted cap pulled down over her golden hair. Her lovely face was pale with fear, and her blue eyes searched the anxious faces of the group.

"Tell me what has happened," she cried brokenly. "The light is not burning, and they say that Rufus Weed is ashore here and intoxicated!"

"Then your pa's all alone?" asked Captain Simon, laying a horny hand on the girl's trembling shoulder.

"Yes, he must be, and I am afraid something has happened to him. The light was burning an hour ago—I saw it—and now—it is out, and I'm afraid, afraid for the steamer!" Her bright head leaned against Captain Heatherby's blue sleeve.

"Now, see here, sissy, don't you cry," he comforted her. "Your pa's most likely had a dizzy spell. He ain't been real well lately. Some of us men will go out to the light and see what's the matter." Then, turning to the group, which had been augmented by newcomers until the room was crowded, he added, "I want volunteers to go out to Pillar o' Fire with me."

Silence followed this rash invitation. Could a small boat live in the treacherous water that surrounded the Pillar o' Fire?

It was evident that few believed it, for one by one they edged toward the door and disappeared into the night.

Madison Peters stepped forward, his black eyes aflame with some great resolve.

"I'll go," he said quietly. "You stay to home, Cap'n Simon."

"Nobody'll keep me to home," interrupted the old sailor fiercely. "My boy's out there on that steamer without a light to guide him into the harbor, and there's other souls aboard of the Neptune, and there's Mina's pa up there in the light—there can't nobody keep me back!"

"All right," said Madison. "How about you, Mina?" He was in love with Mina Wallace, and he knew the girl's intrepid heart.

"I'm going," she said, lifting her head and smiling at him. "Three of us can manage the dory. Rufus left it at the landing steps. Let us hurry."

As the door closed behind them the three Liscums looked at each other.

"I don't ever expect to see one of them three again," said Mrs. Liscum dismally as she retreated to her pigeonholes.

"Now, Lida, don't you be losing heart," began her husband weakly. "Shet up!" snapped Lida Liscum crossly.

Tim Liscum munched some dried prunes and looked thoughtfully at the glowing stove.

"Funny, ain't it?" he asked presently. "There's Madison Peters riskin' his life to go out and light Pillar o' Fire so's Cap'n Joe Heatherby won't lose his life."

"I don't see anything funny about it," rejoined his mother. "It's what's called a noble deed."

"It's funny because Madison's in love with Mina and everybody knows that Mina's going to marry Cap'n Joe!" retorted Tim.

The harbor was a tossing mass of black water and flying spume. The lighthouse dory had vanished from the landing steps, but Madison Peters led them to his own stout motorboat, and in ten minutes the engine was sputtering briskly and, with her three passengers cowering under the canvas top, turned her nose into the blackness beyond.

The sturdy little craft rose on the waves, teetered uncertainly upon the crest and then plunged down into the valley of water.

"If 'twas only clear you could make the shoals by sightin' One Pine Point, a half pint nor'west," growled Captain Simon.

"I'll make it," said Madison calmly. His heart beat quickly, for the nearness of Mina Wallace unnerved him, strong man that he was. He knew that his love was hopeless, and he had resolved to ship as first mate on a new schooner which was to ply between Philadelphia and Savannah—that would take him far away from old, unhappy associations. But this last deed was required of him, this last wrench—to save Captain Joe Heatherby for Mina Wallace.

At last they emerged from the harbor's narrow mouth, and the fury of the storm caught them and tossed them to and fro. The engine missed fire, an avalanche of water drenched the boat from stem to stern, and the three clung together just as Madison called hoarsely:

"Stand by, Cap'n Simon; we're there!"

Mina Wallace never knew how they made a landing on the black and slippery stones, but Madison Peters had barely left the boat before it was torn from his grasp and disappeared from view. They clambered up the stones to the stone platform before the door, Madison supporting the girl on one arm and Captain Simon Heatherby on the other. Mina's key opened the door, and they fell inside the lighted passageway. The door slammed behind them.

"Help!" a voice called from some upper distance.

"It's father—he is hurt!" cried Mina, and, leaving Captain Heatherby in the sitting room with a glass of strong restorative before him, Mina Wallace and brave Madison Peters mounted the winding stairs to find, almost at the top, beneath the light chamber, the prostrate form of Lighthouse Keeper Wallace.

"I believe I've broken my leg," moaned Wallace as they bent over him. "Something happened to the machinery, and the light went out. I was cozing down to fix it when I slipped and fell. Madison, you fix it; I can wait."

Mina made her father as comfortable as she could on the stone floor, while Madison Peters examined the intricate machinery of the light. It was not new to him, for he had formerly been assistant to John Wallace. In ten minutes he had found the difficulty and conquered it.

The Pillar o' Fire again flashed forth its comforting rays over the black waters of the sound.

Madison Peters helped Mina and Captain Simon to put the lighthouse keeper to bed. Then the young man looked down at the girl smiling so confidently up at him.

"You think the steamer is safe?" she asked eagerly.

"There isn't a better sailor hereabouts than Joe Heatherby," he said generously.

"Ceptin' mebbe yourself," put in Simon Heatherby.

"I'm going ashore to bring the doctor off," said Madison hastily. "I've lost my boat, Mr. Wallace, so I guess I'll have to borrow your other dory."

"Anything you want, Madison," murmured the injured man.

"You better stay here tonight, cap'n," said Madison as he turned away. "I'll stop at your house and tell your wife you're all right."

"So do," agreed Captain Simon meekly. "Mebbe there's some news about the steamer. Joe might have put in at Oyster Harbor."

"Most likely," agreed Madison; then he leaned over and murmured reassuringly to Mina: "He's all right, Mina. Don't you worry," and he hastened out.

"Madison!" cried Mina, blushing from brow to chin.

And long after Madison Peters had started forth on his perilous trip back to the village Mina sat there, a tender smile playing about her lips.

Three hours afterward Madison Peters returned with the doctor. The two men were covered with sleet, and Madison was almost exhausted as he sank down in a chair in the sitting room. Mina had a pot of hot coffee waiting for them, and after the doctor and Captain Heatherby had disappeared within the sickroom Madison set down his cup and smiled wanly.

"I don't know what's the matter with me," he murmured dizzily. "I guess it's the warm room—after being outside." He opened his eyes to find Mina kneeling beside him, his hand between her warm palms, her eyes soft with emotion.

"I thought you had fainted," she said, blushing and withdrawing her hand.

"I kinder made a fool of myself," apologized Madison, sitting up and passing a hand over his bewildered eyes. "I ought to tell you that there's good news about the steamer. Joe put in at Oyster Harbor and telegraphed home that they'd come in tomorrow. Captain Simon would like to hear that."

"I will go and tell him," said Mina. She was gone some time, and when she returned Madison was still sitting there by the table, only his head was down on his arm.

For a long while Mina watched him, the color going and coming in her cheeks until she looked like a minia-

CHAPTER V.

Mary Slade sat down to the breakfast table with a certain sense of bewilderment. It was the same this morning as it had been each successive morning since Dan's departure. She could not bring herself to the realization of the fact that Dan had not come home—apparently did not intend to come home.

She had waited up the night he had gone to the club, just as she had waited up every night of their married life, no matter where her husband was or how late he might be coming home. As the night hours lengthened into day she was forced to the conclusion that Dan meant to stay away for the night. That he wouldn't be home at all through the day never occurred to her. She reasoned that a night's sleep would clear his mind and that he would have recovered from his "tantrum" the next day. But Dan didn't "run in" that day nor the next. The days had become weeks, yet neither by telephone nor letter had he sent as much as a word.

Finally Mary had mustered up her courage and telephoned his club. It took courage for Mary to use the telephone on any occasion. She was afraid of the sound of her own voice the moment she began to talk into the transmitter. This time she feared Dan's displeasure and his possible harshness. Mr. Slade was out, had left no message, they did not know when he would return, was the disappointing result as she hung the receiver on the hook.

This morning, as the maid served her breakfast, she resolved to try again. The situation was getting unbearable. It was bad enough to live in the great house and be surrounded by servants with Dan there. Without him she felt like a prisoner of state and looked on the servants as so many jailers.

Leaving her breakfast practically untasted, Mary again ventured to the telephone. With faltering voice she repeated the number. "One-three-nine-four," with beating heart she inquired for "Mr. Slade," with sinking courage she received the answer that Mr. Slade had gone out, leaving no message. Again and again during the day she repeated the call, only to receive a similar reply. The possibility of her husband having left such a message to be delivered to her, whether he was there or not never occurred to the truthful, simple-minded little woman. But Slade did not want to be reached by her, and if an untruth, more or less, were necessary, the telephone boy was easily bribed.

Meanwhile Slade was eagerly looking forward to his new life. Never a man to waver, he did not once look back to the wife he had so coolly deserted. He was being dined and banqueted and feted, being everywhere hailed as the candidate for governor. He was sniffing the first breath of future glories with keenest delight. This was the sort of thing that made a man feel big! This was the sort of life to lead—with men bowing and salaaming all around him. He walked with a firmer tread. His shoulders were thrown back a bit more arrogantly. His chest was more noticeable as he walked down the street.

The innate conceit and self-esteem of the man made him overlook the fact that the party needed a rich man. He was quite satisfied that he was being boosted by Strickland and the others because of his brains, his unusual ability, his oratory and his power to lead men. He was happier than he had been for years. Every day the new life looked brighter and the old less desirable.

If he gave a thought to Mary it was a passing one. Mary was "comfortable." She had everything that money could buy. The servants would be taking good care of her, of course. Of the lump in Mary's throat as she sat at the lonely breakfast table and as she went through the still more lonesome ordeal of the formal dinner, he knew nothing. Of the woman's aching heart and her eyes bright with unshed tears as she tried to keep up before the servants and make excuses for his absence, Slade was heartlessly oblivious. Or perhaps it was self-esteem again, that made him unable to feel for her—the self-esteem of the successful man who feels no wounds when fighting for what he wants, and neither knows nor cares that others feel them. He had a heart, but it was unpleasantly like Pharaoh's.

But of Katherine Strickland's statuesque beauty and her cosmopolitan manner he was delightfully aware. During the weeks since he had left home Slade had been calling regularly at the Strickland home, partly to consult with the senator and partly for the purpose of posing for the bust which Katherine was modeling. As they sat hour after hour, he posing comfortably, she working deftly and talking even more cleverly, Slade and Katherine had come to a mutual understanding. The more they saw of each other the more each became convinced that their paths would inevitably converge.

Katherine talked animatedly and entertainingly of social life abroad and of the gay times in Washington, and Slade's heart warmed and his eyes flashed as he pictured himself a part of that charmed circle. With keen penetration he saw the longing of the girl's nature, her iron will, her determination to gain social honors at almost any cost. He flattered himself that when he said the word Katherine Strickland would be ready to cast her lot with him.

From the smoking room of Senator Strickland's big house came the strident sound of men's voices, raised in excitement, and, it would seem, acclaim. Now and again the senator's smooth, oratorical voice would sound and then Slade's slightly deprecatory, yet firm and pleased. Then would follow the patter of applause, laughter and the sudden dropping of voices that signified earnest converse.

To Katherine Strickland, sitting in the softly lighted library adjoining, every sound had its meaning. Her eyes sparkled with keen interest. In her cheeks glowed the deep rose of excitement and exultation. In that other room she knew they were making history. In that other room they were putting up a man for governor, a man she admired and who had aroused her interest as no other man had ever done.

Nothing could stand in that man's way, she thought, with a catch in her breath, nothing could stop him now that he was fairly started. How different this domineering, forceful personality from Bob Hayes, the man who had first won her girl's heart, and yet for whom she had never been willing to renounce her interest in the political and social life which obsessed her with the same compelling force as it did Slade.

With an effort she brought her mind back to the present and to Mrs. Wesley Merritt, who had dropped in on her way from a dance to pick up her husband.

"You simply weren't listening to a word I said," Mrs. Merritt complained in her affectedly affectionate way. "I was asking if you know Mr. Slade very well."

"Yes," Katherine replied, lightly, "we know him very well."

"And does he ever mention his wife?" in Mrs. Merritt's most perfectly feline manner.

"Never once," admitted Katherine, without even an attempt at an evasion. "And you have never met her?" Mrs. Merritt was in her glory if she could probe.

"No, I have never met her."

"How extraordinary! My husband—why, Wesley Merritt's name spells hearth and home, domestic purity—while Slade's! They tell me he hasn't seen his wife for weeks, and it's town talk that he's living at his club. And to think he's never mentioned her to you!"

Katherine had quietly rung for a servant, and as Mrs. Merritt finished, remarked casually: "Martin, see that these letters are mailed at once."

Unabashed, Mrs. Merritt was moving eagerly about the artistic room, comfortable in all its appointments, its richness enhanced and mellowed with age, a blend of color that nothing but years can give.

Fannie Merritt was a decided blonde. Her decision had been made more than ten years before. It was a decision that, once made, must be abided by, and the woman had been living up to it ever since. Her gown was the last word of sartorial elegance and style. Daringly décolleté it clung to her long, svelte figure with loving emphasis, and trailed round her exquisitely dressed feet. Her hair did credit to the hairdresser's long and patient efforts, and long, bizarre diamond pendants flashed and sparkled from her ears. If ever a woman had become a slave to her own personal pleasure and dress, that woman was Fannie Merritt. Too self-centered and selfish ever to crave motherhood, she lavished a kind of affection on a watery-eyed little poodle, which repaid her with lap-dog gratitude.

Tonight she was restless and ill at ease. Like Katherine, her mind was full of one thought—Slade, Slade, Slade—but thoughts that took a different direction. She was sick of his name, sick of hearing of his money, sick of the talk of his power and of hearing him named as "the man of the hour." He was winning the very honors she had coveted for her husband, and taking them right out from beneath his very eyes and nose. There didn't seem to be a doubt of Slade becoming governor, the very position for which her husband had been striving for the past six terms. Slade with his millions needed the governorship no more than a pampered child needs a new toy, while to her husband success or failure this time meant either the retrieving of his fortunes or his utter ruin.

The abstraction of the two women was broken by the sudden entrance of Hayes.

"Whew!" he whistled. "They're having a time of it in there. Good evening, Mrs. Merritt, your husband is certainly making it warm for Mr. Slade."

"Indeed," laughed Mrs. Merritt, gratified for the moment.

"Dear, dear!" she exclaimed as she watched Hayes gazing wistfully at Katherine and looking very handsome and manly in his well-made evening clothes. "It's quite like old times to see you together." Unhappy herself, it gave her a certain pleasure to make other people unhappy. The jealousy she had long felt for the younger and more beautiful woman found expression now in her purring tones, as, with amiable cruelty, she reminded them of their earlier intimacy. She took delight in making Bob writhe, and

THE NEW, STRAIGHT LINED SKIRTS ARE CONSIDERABLY WIDER AT THE BOTTOM.

Unless all present indications fail skirts should be quite a bit wider at the bottom. Many of the new imported models are showing pleats at the sides; these pleats, of course, are very flat and usually tacked together, but it is cheering to know that they are there. At a recent opening there were many of these straight skirts, and it was noticed that on an average they measured at least two yards around. There seems to be a tendency to hike them up a trifle in front, which causes the skirt to fall in somewhat, giving a trousers-like appearance.

The frock illustrated in No. 8077 is suitable for afternoon or evening; it is fashioned of lavender satin velled in lavender chiffon and banded with marabout. The design requires for size 36, 4 3/4 yards of 36 inch material for the overblouse and tunic, with 4 3/4 yards of satin for the foundation dress.

Katherine whiten as she recalled their passionate young love when only the senator's stern interference had kept them from wedding.

"Let me see," she recollected, "when I was your confidante, you were twenty-one, Katherine, and you, Rob, were twenty-four. I can feel Rob's hands gripping mine yet: 'O, Fannie—please see her for me—the senator doesn't approve of it.' And the tears you shed on my shoulder, Katherine—why, it feels wet to think of it."

"O! Fannie!" Katherine's voice was not as firm as usual.

"I always said," the woman persisted, "Rob, she'll come home to you in the end—"

"I think I'll go back and listen to the discussion," and Bob flung disgustedly out of the room. At the door he almost collided with Merritt. Katherine had hurried out to see a reporter who wanted the whereabouts and the whys of the dinner party to Slade.

"I can't possibly get away, dear," Merritt explained to his wife. "I've been buttonholed by some men from up the state. Shall you wait or go home—first?"

Mrs. Merritt refused to be dismissed in that peremptory fashion. "I'll wait," she returned with acid sweetness. "Then if you are not ready I'll run along."

"Slade's had an ovation tonight," Merritt informed her, nodding toward the smoking-room. "The big out-of-town men are all here. Some of 'em in there yet. He's big, Fannie. He's big. We can't deny that. The brute attacks his point with all the force of a sledge hammer."

"Yes, that's what you lack—punch!" his wife turned on him petulantly.

"You're snowed under," she complained, bitterly. "If you'd taken my advice you wouldn't have come to this Slade fed tonight. What's your paper for," she demanded, "if you can't attack your rival candidate in its columns? Anyone would think you wanted to make him governor—instead of yourself."

"I can't attack him publicly," Merritt retorted. "He'd put up glue factories facing our property and, with a lake breeze blowing our way—phew! My position is very difficult. Of course, election's a long way ahead, but I'm the only stick in his puddle."

"Yes, you're a big stick!" she taunted. "Why don't you do something?"

"What can I do?" he groaned. "I've been told tonight by no less than four men that they won't support me again. And Strickland's speech introducing Slade was a masterpiece!"

"Yes—Strickland's masterpieces are concocted by his daughter, we all know that. Just as I write your stuff," she finished with hateful emphasis on the possessive.

"My dear, I wish you'd be more careful!" warned Merritt, making sure that the door leading into the smoking-room was closed.

"Your 'Message to the Farmer'—that made you famous! What did I ever get for writing it?" and with self-satisfied deliberateness she arranged herself carefully in a low-seated chair near the fireplace.

"I never denied that you had a man's brain," placatingly, drawlingly, mockingly, "darling."

"Yes—I'm the family mosquito that buzzes behind your ears. God help us if it wasn't for me. Did you ask the senator for the $10,000 I want?" she demanded.

"He can't," Merritt was huddled in the nearest chair. The subject had been causing him appetiteless days and sleepless nights. When a woman of Fannie Merritt's persistency and tenacity wants something a man can't get then that man is very likely to be nagged into desperation.

"You look out, Wesley," she answered, alarm breaking the careful modulation of her voice. "That's the first time he ever refused us."

"He's broke—dead broke. I don't know how he can keep this up. The senator's nearly out. That's why he's sticking to Slade."

"Well, I don't care how you get it—I want it. It's vital. I've got to have ten thousand to go to Europe. Everybody's going—Mrs. Webb, Mrs. O'Donnell—and her voice trailed off into a pettish whine.

"Yes, I know all about that crowd," Merritt snarled. "Sunny places for shady people."

"Wesley! I need clothes. I've told everybody I'm going," and the peevish woman glared at her husband. Then she added suddenly: "Can't the senator ask Slade?"

"Oh, my God, Fannie!" the hectoring man groaned. "Can I suggest that? A rival candidate! I've mortgaged my property up to the hilt now for clothes—but sooner than—"

"I don't care—I need clothes," his wife interrupted, rising and walking restlessly about the room. "I've got to go to Europe. The devil take your excuses."

Then, with a sudden change of thought, she cooed. "Wesley!"

Merritt stood with his elbow on the mantel, looking moodily into the fire. "Wesley," she cooed again. "Why don't you—if you can't get in—why don't you boom Slade? They say he's buying everybody."

"Well, we've been bought." Her husband's tone indicated just how little consideration such a plan would have from him.

"No, but you've been defeated six times," she objected, determined to argue this new possibility that had just occurred to her. "Wes—if the senator has gone back on you—look out. Sell out. I must have clothes."

She stopped as the senator himself entered from the smoking room.

"They're asking for you, Wesley," and Merritt, glad of the interruption, hurried out.

"Ah—good evening, Fannie," Strickland took her hand in his smooth, affable way. "I'm sorry, Fannie, that Wesley doesn't take more to Slade. It's a great mistake. Why don't you tell him so?"

"Oh, my gracious!" her manner changing to suit the occasion. "What influence could I possibly have with my husband? He's a man of iron will. Why, I have to do everything he tells me myself. I wouldn't dare to meddle with his affairs."

"Well, just coax him, Fannie, the way a nice, sweet, womanly woman can," urged the senator, knowing full well that the Merritts had one manège for private use and quite another for publication.

"I want to go to Europe and my husband says he can't afford it." Her voice dropped to a sugary whine. "We can't all be millionaires like Mr. Slade, can we?" Just think. It would cost $10,000, to say nothing of clothes."

"Don't worry about that trip to Europe, Fannie," the senator advised, meaningly. "I think," and he paused significantly, "I think you'll earn it." With that he started toward the smoking-room. "Wesley," he called, and as Merritt appeared in the doorway, remarked: "I believe your wife has something to say to you."

"Oh, yes, Wesley—I have something most important to say."

"Well, if it's about that trip to Europe," growled Merritt, asserting himself as he would never dare to do when he was alone with her.

"Now, Wesley, come with me to the balcony," Fannie coaxed in what she considered her prettiest manner.

"You'll excuse us, senator?"

As Fannie dragged her husband out of the room Hayes, returning from the smoking-room, and Katherine, returning from her talk with the reporter, found themselves alone. Katherine was nervous and ill at ease. Immediately she began to busy herself folding copies of her father's speech and inserting them into mailing envelopes.

"I Couldn't—Oh, Rob! I Couldn't."

"Slade's doing it," Bob remarked. "They are nearly all wiped out in there. Those who haven't been beguiled, have been bullied or bought—Hold on! That sounds like the headlines in a Socialist paper—"

"What's happened to you?" he broke off abruptly. "I can't find a trace of you left. Ever since you came back—I've been hunting for one sign of the girl I knew. Your notes—the very letters you wrote me from Europe sounded as if some one else had written them. Who is it who's occupying your mind, Katherine?"

"I don't know what you mean," the girl evaded.

"You used to care a lot for me," reflectively, his mind recalling the warm, eager welcome of her arms the day he had declared his love for her, six years before.

"I only thought I did," she declared, but her eyes dropped before his steady gaze.

"You did care," positively. "You did care, I could tell. When you went away the first time you did. Why, it was only a question of my luck turning. You were going to wait for me. I always knew that. Then I met Slade. Even the senator's got a good word for me now. But you—" his voice broke and he leaned forward and laid his hand over hers as it rested idly on the table.

"Heavens!" he exclaimed, as he snatched his hand away. "What I ought to have done was to have ridden up here, taken you over my shoulder and galloped off with you on a broncho."

"Oh, Rob," she breathed, really pleased at his domineering tone.

"That's the sort of a man to get on with a woman like you," he accused. "A brute! A man could do anything with you if he once conquered you. There's nothing in these long understandings," he broke off, disgustedly. "I've lost you and I don't know how, or why. I do know you liked me better than anyone else, and I adore you yet," he finished, impulsively clasping her hand with both of his. Katherine patted his strong fingers with her free hand.

"Please, Rob, I know you do," and she left him to pass back and forth the length of the room. "I can't," she sighed. Then hurriedly: "If I only had the courage. Oh, Rob!" and she turned on him with a helpless little gesture.

"What do you mean by courage?" he demanded.

"I mean I'd have to—to live here in this little hole in the West," she burst forth, vehemently. "No—no, I can't face it—always!"

"Well, suppose it did mean to stay here?" Bob stood with folded arms. "It's a home. Everyone vegetates more or less at home. Katherine!" his voice became more tender, "do you really mean that?" And he put his arms around her shoulders and looked long and earnestly into her upraised face.

"I couldn't—Oh, Rob, I couldn't," she protested. "All this month I've been weakening—but I—"

"Ah," he interrupted, his face close to hers. "You're wearing my flowers, too—I saw that when I came in. And my picture—you are still keeping that."

"But I—I can't quite," she began. "I'm dreadfully troubled, Rob," she finally managed to say. She turned from his embrace. "We'd be poor, and then we'd be like the Merritts," with a tragic spread of her arms. "I'm used to the world. I want to live—everywhere—to see things. I'd die here, vegetating!"

"Oh, no you wouldn't," Hayes started to remonstrate, when the door of the smoking room opened and Slade appeared.

"I was just going to look you up, Robert. I thought you wouldn't go without seeing me, but—"

"No, of course not." Hayes did not attempt to conceal his annoyance at the interruption. Katherine moved slowly toward the door.

"I'm not driving you away, am I, Miss Katherine?"

Before she could answer Fannie Merritt came sweeping in. She was radiant. Her beaming face and Merritt's sullen one made the situation plain to all in the room.

"My dear," she exclaimed, turning to Katherine. "You were quite right! Mr. Slade is a great man. I'm leaving my Wesley here to work for him. I'm off for Europe next week," she gushed as Hayes helped her into her evening wrap, "leaving my poor, dear boy all alone. You will be good to him, won't you? Good night, Mr. Slade; thank you," and, closely followed by Katherine, she hurried out to her waiting motor.

Slade's face was a study in amused complacency as he realized that he need fear nothing more from Wesley Merritt or his "tin-horn tooting sheet." The self-esteem that was slowly but completely obscuring clear vision, prevented him from seeing that his money, not himself, had brought about the change. The money he had made was his—was he himself. He confused its vast power to bend the Merritts and their world with his own strength.

PAROLE REPORTS FILED BY BOARD

8,221 Prisoners Paroled from State
Penal Institutions from April
1, 1897 to April, 1914.

LARGE EARNINGS REPORTED

Twenty-six Out of Every One Hundred Paroled Violated Terms of Parole—4,788 Released.

Reports from the State Prison, Reformatory and the Woman's Prison on the number of persons paroled by the parole boards to the institutions from April 1, 1897, and April 1, 1914, were submitted to the board of state charities at its quarterly meeting yesterday. Governor Ralston, a member of the board by reason of his office, attended the meeting. He was interested especially in the reports bearing on all phases of the management of state institutions.

The indeterminate sentence and parole laws have been in force seventeen years. The board at the State Prison has paroled 3,088 men; the Reformatory, 4,896, and the Woman's Prison, 237, a total of 8,221. All of these persons left the institution under the rules and regulations of the respective parole boards and thereafter were under the supervision of the visiting agents of the institutions.

Twenty-six out of every 100 (2,145 in all) violated their paroles. The percentage of parole violators is practically the same in the three institutions: 26.4 per cent. at the State Prison, 25.9 per cent. at the Reformatory, and 26 per cent. at the Woman's Prison. Of the 2,145 parole violators, the institutions succeeded in apprehending 1,250. The remaining 895 are at large.

Of the total number paroled 4,788 served their parole period and were released from supervision; the sentence of 455 expired in the parole period and they were automatically discharged, 142 died and 691 remained under supervision April 1, 1914.

These men and women while on parole reported regularly to the institution authorities. Their reports indicate earnings amounting to $2,284,577.85 and expenses $1,878,406.71. This means that these persons not only earned their own living while on parole, but had savings amounting to $406,171.14, an average of nearly $50 each.

The agents of the board of state charities in the quarter made 921 calls to visit children taken from orphanages and placed in private homes. Twenty-one, or 2.3 per cent, were reported not found. Of the 900 children visited, 750, or 83.3 per cent, were reported doing well; 105, or 11.7 per cent, fairly; a total of 855, or 95 per cent, doing satisfactorily. Forty-five, or 5 per cent, were reported doing poorly. One hundred and seventy-seven applications for children were investigated. Forty-six, or 26 per cent, were rejected. Sixteen per cent. of the applications were for children under 6 years of age; 11 per cent. for children 6 to 10; 33 per cent. for boys and girls from 11 to 13, and 40 per cent. for children 14 years and over.

In the quarter 147 children were placed in family homes. Ninety, or 61.2 per cent, were placed for the first time, and fifty-seven, or 49.8 per cent, had been placed before. Twenty-seven children were returned to counties.

The agents made seventy-three visits to county boards and officials and made 131 special investigations. There were 507½ days spent in the field and the cost to the state was $3,415.37 for agents' expenses and to the counties for children's expenses, $309.41.

THE water front at Vera Cruz, Mexico, is shown in this picture. Wharfage accommodations are limited, but still the port is the most important on the gulf coast of the republic. It is only four feet above the sea, and its population is about 30,000. It is one of the first places settled by Spanish invaders.

CRIMSON CLOVER EXCELLENT FOR FERTILIZER AND PASTURE

Entire Green Crop Must be Plowed Under if Land is to be Best Enriched.

Washington, D. C., April 29.—A number of ways in which the early appearance of crimson clover in the spring can be turned to the farmer's advantage are pointed out in a new publication of the United States Department of Agriculture, Farmers' Bulletin 579, "Crimson Clover Utilization." In the Southern and Central Atlantic States this crop is of particular value. Generally speaking, it suffers from the severe winters in the north and from too great dryness west of the Mississippi. In Florida also it has proved less successful than elsewhere.

Crimson clover, says the bulletin, has two great advantages. It is an excellent fertilizer and it can be used for pasture and hay before any other green growth is available, the land being then sown with an ordinary summer-grown crop. The clover itself can be sown toward the end of the summer on land where such late crops as corn or tomatoes are still under cultivation. Its use, therefore, does not interfere with other products and its benefits cost little but the labor and seed involved.

To obtain the full value of crimson clover as a fertilizer, the entire green crop should be plowed under, thus adding to the soil a large quantity of nitrogen and humus, or decayed vegetable matter. The poorer the land the greater in the benefit that the succeeding crop derives from this process. A yield of 30 bushels of corn per acre may ordinarily be increased by crimson clover to 45, but on richer land an increase of more than 10 bushels is uncommon. A convenient method of calculation is to consider a full crop of crimson clover, weighing with roots and tops, about 10 tons an acre, as the equivalent of a distribution of 8 tons of fresh barnyard manure to an acre. In this way the soil is greatly enriched each year without interfering in any way with the regular money crops, such as corn, cotton, or tomatoes.

It is, however, by no means necessary to sacrifice the entire crop of crimson clover to fertilizing purposes. Excellent results can be obtained by ploughing under merely the roots and stubble. This, it is estimated, returns to the soil 40 per cent, as much nitrogen as the green crop. When this is done the clover itself can be used either for pasture, before ordinary grass is sufficiently far advanced to be available, or for hay which can be gathered in time to leave the land free for another crop.

Crimson clover intended for hay must, however, be cut at the right moment, when the most advanced heads are beginning to show faded flowers at their base. At this stage the plants contain the maximum amount of protein and dry matter, while the leaves are still present and the stems comparatively green. If the harvest is put off, the short hairs on the stems and flower heads become dry and stiff. In this stage there is danger that they may form hard dry hair balls in the intestinal tracts of horses and mules to which the hay is fed. These hair balls, solid, compact felt-like structures, nearly always cause death. Early cutting, however, and judicious mixing with other hay will obviate this difficulty to a great extent, and, under any circumstances, cattle are rarely affected. By dairymen, crimson clover hay is considered a roughage feed fully equal if not superior to red clover.

For early pasturing crimson clover is even more satisfactory, its chief drawback being the limited period in which it can be utilized for this purpose. This period, however, is ample to enable the ordinary grass pastures to attain a growth which will greatly increase their carrying capacity later in the season. After the cattle are removed, the uneaten plants and the manure left behind are ploughed under, the manure of course, forming a valuable addition to the fertilizing effect of the clover.

As pasture, hay or fertilizer, therefore, crimson clover offers itself to farmers at a time when the ordinary summer-grown crops are not available. Incidentally, it should be said, this clover is valuable for poultry. A tubful of hand-cropped leaves thrown into the poultry yard will provide the chickens with the best possible green food at a season when eggs are ordinarily high and everything that promotes laying is most welcome. Small patches of crimson clover are, in fact, grown by poultry raisers for this purpose alone.

Methods of growing the crop, the preparation of the seed bed, and the soils and sections best adapted to the purpose are discussed in a previous publication of the Department of Agriculture, Farmers' Bulletin 550, "Crimson Clover; Growing the Crop." Both this bulletin and the new bulletin "Crimson Clover; Utilization" will be sent free on request.
